

I hope Captain Conder will kindly favour us with his opinion in this matter. Not knowing his whereabouts, I can only address him through the pages of our Quarterly.

R. F. HUTCHINSON, M.D.

JHANSI, March 5, 1887.

NOTE.—No conclusive identification of this site is, I think, recognised. Jerome's site is, perhaps, the Kcnîset er Ra'wât, "Church of Flocks," east of Bethlehem—the old traditional Shepherd's Field. The watch-towers round Bethlehem are quite modern.—C.R.C.

POPULATION LIST OF THE LÎVÂ OF 'AKKA.

By G. SCHUMACHER.

The population of the principal places in Palestine was to the present date, in the absence of any census of official character merely an estimate one, as the Dafâtir en Nefûs دفاتر النفوس the "registers of souls" were based on such erroneous reports and contained such multitudes of false statements, that it was impossible to consider them as an authentic register, as even the spelling of the local names were apt to lead to infinite errors. At the beginning of 1886, one year ago, the Ministry of the "Travaux Publics," the Adâret en Nâfu'a at Constantinople, took up with praiseworthy zeal the reconstruction of the roads throughout the empire, a reform which had been already introduced during Midhat Pasha's government as Grand Vizier at the Capital, and especially executed during his time as Governor-General of Syria, but which had been dropped again until the date above stated.

The orders of the Administration of Public works were based on the following grounds: That the roads, "chaussées," were to be constructed in socage; that every male subject of the empire, from the age of 16 to 60 years, was obliged to do socage duty, and that foreign subjects were not exempted from this duty, for the general welfare of the country. This service was limited to an annual labour of four days for every person liable to socage, to work appointed by the engineer.

To perform these stipulations, the Government soon found that a thorough review of the census of population was urgent, and therefore induced accurate lists of every Mudirîye, Kaimakâmîye and Mutasarrîfiye (Lîvâ), which are handed over to the engineer of the district, according to which he distributes the socage work. In the Lîvâ, or the so-called "Pashalik" of 'Akka, in the limits of which, the reconstruction of roads was defined by the Authorities of Syria as "an urgent necessity owing to its importance," the lists or census were made with some care, and the work in the field began also and is still continued, but they soon proved to be unexact. As I had the superintendence of these public works within the Lîvâ, I caused a second thorough name list, which I for a good part personally controlled, and was supported by the envy of individuals in this function, as I was sure that no fellâh would perform his duty unless every capable soul of the village was also present. The counting up was therefore especially done with regard to the male members of a family, while the women and children were noted with less exactitude; the following list contains therefore in its first column the number of male persons liable to socage between the ages of 16 to 60, the second, the actual number of souls in the place; this last number was found to be exactly five times the amount of the socagers and this multiplicand (five) was thus found: I chose Tiberias and Haifa, as places of special study, took the "Mamûr en Nefûs," the employé with a number of Zaptiehs (police) and went from house to house, counting up every living human soul in a Hâra \ddot{y} , (quarter), noting besides those members who were capable of doing socage work, and from this detailed inspection I found the above mentioned coefficient. The population of the cities of Haifa, Tiberias, and Nazareth was several times checked and is therefore as exact as possible; that of Safed is based upon the reports of the officials, as the fanaticism of the native Jews threw too many obstacles in the way of personal inquiry; 'Akka was partly checked by me, and I believe the number given to be trustworthy. The spelling of the names (in Arabic) are given according to the list gathered on the spot by the officials. They were, without exception, checked by me and such natives who have a thorough knowledge of the country, such as Tâbo and 'Ashâr (land-register and Tenth) officials.

NOTE.—A few alterations in the spelling of the names in English have been made to agree with those on the P.E.F. maps.
